Text of video message by Eric Falt, Regional Director and Representative of UNESCO:

The designation of Aruba as a UNESCO Biosphere Reserve is an international recognition of the island's extraordinary relationship with nature, culture, and sustainable development.

From its deserts and iconic cactus landscapes to its coral reefs and coastal ecosystems, Aruba shows the world that small islands can lead with vision, resilience, and innovation.

Biosphere reserves are not only about protecting nature. They are about creating a future where communities and the environment thrive together. This is why the biosphere reserve model is so relevant for the Caribbean.

On behalf of UNESCO, I congratulate the Government and people of Aruba, as well as all the partners, experts, communities, and young people whose dedication made this achievement possible.
